

Self-Reflection Sheet

We've explored what's driving us forward, tomorrow we'll be thinking about what's holding us back. To prepare ourselves for that work we've created this self reflection sheet to give us each some time to consider our roles in driving or holding back progress in the system we are seeking to change.

You'll need 45 – 60 mins for this activity

Feel free to take down notes, or don't. Feel free to share this with others, or keep this to yourself. This is your time to reflect on what you need from others in order to make progress and also what others might need from you.

Your reflection questions

1. What is my current role in making the field of metadata description antiracist, equitable and just?
2. Is this the role I want to play? If not, what contribution do I want to make?
3. Where in this journey am I feeling sure, secure, brave, capable, in control and abundant?
4. Where in this journey am I feeling unsure, insecure, fearful, incapable, powerless and limited?
5. What systemic, technical or procedural, social, cultural and personal blockers have I experiences in this journey
6. What do I need personally and professionally to contribute to this journey?
7. What does the journey need from me?

We hope you find value from this moment of reflection.
